REASONS FOR ALLOWANCE

1. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The prior art of record fails to teach and/or suggest a method of forming a seal in a fuel cell assembly wherein a plurality of elements separate from one another are assembled so that a groove network the extends through the separate elements is formed so that a source of uncured liquid sealant material can be injected into the groove network to fill the network and at the same time vent gas from the network to deliver the sealant through the groove network so that after curing a seal is formed in the grooves of the network to thereby seal the fuel cell assembly.

The closest prior art to Barton et al (US Patent No. 6057054) shows a membrane electrode assembly having a sealing material impregnated into the porous electrode layers using a flow processable elastomer that is applied to the MEA using a vacuum injection molding process. Barton et al does not show that there is a groove network extending through the separate elements that make up the fuel cell, the filling port open to the exterior in communication with the groove network, nor does the patent show simultaneous venting of the gas from a groove network. The groove network shown in Barton et al appears to be in only the transport plates since the MEA does not extend all the way to the end of the transport plates and the disclosure as set forth shows that the seal 110 in those aspects of the invention as shown by way of Figures 4A-4C show that the seal 110 is not injection molded in this aspect of the invention since the disclosure talks about the compressive forces on the fuel cell stack compressing the seal 110 against the active surface of the separator plates 200. If the cell was already assembled prior to the injection of the sealant material then there would not be compressive forces on the fuel cell stack to compress the seal when the seal was injection molded but rather the seal would just fill the space and bond with the surfaces in which it is in contact with.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
